Richard Strauss - String Sextet from Capriccio, Opus 85

This unique “piece within a piece” opens Strauss’s last opera, the one-act Capriccio (1940-41). The Sextet is heard offstage as the opera’s main characters, the composer Flamand and the poet Olivier, discuss the relative merit of words and music in opera, a favorite subject of Strauss. The Sextet he aptly called “a conversation piece.” Flamand watches his employer and beloved, the Countess Madeleine, to determine her reaction to his piece. While writing about writing - and certainly composing about composing - can be deadly, in the case of Capriccio it somehow works. Paul Hosely calls Capriccio “one of the composer’s most intimate and effortlessly melodic theatre pieces,” a statement corroborated by Strauss himself when he called it “a second Rosenkavlier without the longeurs.” None of his opera scores, says Strauss scholar Michael Kennedy, is “more refined, more translucent, more elegant, more varied.” Thus it is with the Sextet. In the final debate over the significance of words and music in opera, it would seem that music, absolute music, wins.

Franz Schubert - String Quintet in C Major, D. 956

Schubert’s String Quintet in C Major, universally acknowledged as one of the finest creations in all chamber music, dates from the miraculous final year of that composer’s brief life, 1828. That year saw the revision of the “Great” Symphony in C Major and the composition of the three final piano sonatas, the songs of the Schwanengesang collection, this quintet, and the song “Der Hirt auf Dem Felsen,” completed in the weeks just prior to Schubert’s death on November 19. The date of the Quintet is difficult to pin down, but it was probably composed at the end of the summer - on October 2, Schubert wrote to one of his publishers that he had “finally turned out a quintet for 2 violins, 1 viola, and 2 violoncellos.”

Many have been quick to hear premonitions of death in this quintet, as if this music - Schubert’s last instrumental work - must represent a summing-up of his life. But it is dangerous to read intimations of mortality into music written shortly before any composer’s death, and there is little basis for such a conclusion here - although he was ill during the summer, Schubert did not know that he was fatally ill. Rather than being death-haunted, the Quintet in C Major is music of great richness, music that suffuses a golden glow. Some of this is due to its unusual sonority: the additional cello brings weight to the instrumental texture and allows one cello to become a full partner in the thematic material, a freedom Schubert fully exploits. Of unusual length (over 50 minutes long), the quintet also shows great harmonic freedom–some have commented that this music seems to change keys every two bars.

The opening Allegro ma non troppo is built on three theme groups: the quiet violin theme heard at the very beginning, an extended duet for the two cellos, and a little march figure for all five instruments. The cello duet is unbelievably beautiful, so beautiful that many musicians (certainly many cellists!) have said that they would like nothing on their tombstone except the music for this passage. But it is the march tune that dominates the development section; the recapitulation is a fairly literal repeat of the opening section, and a brief coda brings the movement to its close.

Longest of the four movements, the Adagio is in ABA form. The opening is remarkable: the three middle voices—second violin, viola, and first cello—sing a gentle melody that stretches easily over 28 bars; the second cello accompanies them with pizzicato notes, while high above the first violin decorates the melody with quiet interjections of its own. The middle section, in F minor, feels agitated and dark; a trill leads back to the opening material, but now the two outer voices accompany the melody with runs and swirls that have suddenly grown complex.

The third movement is a scherzo-and-trio, marked Presto. The bounding scherzo, with its hunting horn calls, is fairly straightforward, but the trio is quite unusual, in some surprising ways the emotional center of the entire quintet. One normally expects a trio section to be gentle in mood, sometimes even a thematic extension of the scherzo. But in this trio, marked Andante sostenuto and in the unexpected key of D-flat major, is spare, grave, haunting. Schubert sets it in 4/4 instead of the expected 3/4, and its lean lines and harmonic surprises give it a grieving quality quite different from the scherzo. The lament concludes, and the music plunges back into sunlight as the scherzo resumes.

Many have heard Hungarian folk music in the opening of the Allegretto, with its evocation of wild gypsy fiddling. The second theme is one of those graceful little tunes that only Schubert could write; both themes figure throughout the movement, until finally another cello duet leads to a fiery coda ingeniously employing both main themes.

The Quintet in C Major is one of the glories of the chamber music repertory and one of Schubert’s finest works. Yet he never heard a note of it. It lay in manuscript for years and was not performed until 1850, twenty-two years after his death.
Kenn Wagner, currently first violinist of the Atlanta Symphony, began pursuing a musical career at age 13, after soloing with the New Orleans and Arlington (VA) symphonies. Before graduating from Indiana University, he won his first position with the New Jersey Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Wagner joined the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra in 1994, with the aid of coaching from William Steck, Concertmaster of the National Symphony Orchestra.

With his dream realized, he has enjoyed substituting with chamber music groups such as the Riverside Chamber Players, Leaptrott Trio, Atlanta Chamber Players, Awadagin Pratt’s Next Generation Festival, and National Chamber Players with special guest Kenneth Slowik of the Smithsonian Chamber Players. Kenn has appeared as soloist and Concertmaster with the Atlanta Community Symphony Orchestra, performing the Barber, Tchaikovsky, Brahms, and Glazanov violin concertos, and the Beethoven Concerto for a special anniversary concert of the ACSO at Atlanta Symphony Hall. In 2008, he also joined the Camerata at Kennesaw University and performed the Haydn C Major Concerto and was reengaged to play Navarra by Sarasate with Helen Kim. One special engagement in the 2009 season was his performance of the Bach Double Concerto with Olga Shpitko and the Dekalb Symphony Orchestra. In 2010, Kenn had the privilege of performing Mendelssohn’s Violin and Piano Concerto with the City of Christ Church Symphony Orchestra string section in New Zealand. Later that summer he performed the Mozart Sinfonia Concertante with the Wintergreen Festival Orchestra. In 2011, he was guest soloist with the Shenzhen Symphony Orchestra in China.
