Conference Update

The joint SCLA/SELA conference, planned for Charleston, Oct 24th-26th, is close at hand! See the list of programs and events on the SCLA web site at <http://www.scla.org/docs/2002conferenceprogram.html> On Thursday, start the conference off with a bus tour of Charleston libraries or attend one of four stimulating pre-conferences. On Saturday afternoon, end your stay by treating yourself to a Charleston garden tour, but remember to save your appetite. There is a low-country oyster roast slated for later that evening. In between, attend a diverse program of over 45 presentations, as well as keynote speeches by Dickens scholar, Elliott Engel, noted author Dori Sanders, best-selling fantasy fiction writer, Robert Jordan and ALA President, Mitch Freedman. Librarians from all over the Southeast will be here. It's a wonderful opportunity to learn, share experiences, network and discover the latest offerings from a number of the library world's top vendors. We think there is something for everyone at this conference, but you be the judge. Take a look at the tentative program and let us know what you think.
