Impediments, Partners, and Proposals: Preparing Graduate Students to Start Their Thesis and Dissertation Proposals

Erin O’Toole, Science Librarian, University of North Texas
Transforming Libraries for Graduate Students Conference, March 23, 2018
Impediments

• What is a proposal?
• Where do I find literature?
• How do I organize myself?
• Busy schedules

Take 1 minute to think about impediments at your institution. Please record your ideas on the worksheet.
New program

• Format and content of proposals
• Search strategies for databases
• Organization with reference managers
• Saturday workshop

Take 1 minute to think about what services/programs you could offer to help students successfully complete and defend their proposals. Please record your ideas on the worksheet.
Partners

- Teaching faculty
- Subject librarians
- RefWorks administrator
- Graduate school

Take 1 minute to think about which partners could support your services/programs. Please record your ideas on the worksheet.
2015-2016 Workshops

• Saturday 8:30 – 4:30
• 4 sessions and lunch
• All disciplines
• Promoted to graduate students and faculty by email
Assessment

- Waiting list is complicated
- Absenteeism is ~30%
- Workshop too long
- Objectives not clear
- Separate workshops for disciplines
- Better food
2016-2017 Workshops

• 2 per long semester – STEM Humanities/Social Sciences
• Clearer registration form
• Saturday 9 – 3
• Multiple modes of promotion
• Healthier food

Sharing and Questions

Please leave your worksheet if you’re willing to have your ideas added to the slideshow posted in the Kennesaw State Digital Commons. Thank you!
Participants at the presentation were asked to brainstorm about:
1) impediments their students face when starting a dissertation or thesis proposal
2) potential programs or services that could remove or lessen the impediments, and
3) potential partners for the programs/services, inside or outside the library

The participants came up with the creative ideas listed in the table below.

• Graduate School |
| How do I pick or narrow down a topic? | • Brainstorm session with literature searching
• Research consultations with liaisons | • Graduate writing center
• Liaisons |
| My institution requires doctoral students to take 3 of 4 courses following regular coursework and comprehensive exams: Review of Literature, Data Analysis or Qualitative/Quantitative, and Chapters 1-3 of dissertation. | A past cohort agreed to meet 4 times a year once they entered the phase with these required courses. Ten students started the courses, but only 4-5 eventually graduated. They need more help! | • Library
• Writing center
• Dissertation chair
• Dissertation committee
• Statistician assistance
• Study spaces (single and group)
• Peer editors |

| • Difficulty deciding on or narrowing a topic
• Lack of interaction with librarian as part of process                                           | • Asynchronous online tutorials on beginning a proposal
• Consultation with a librarian to discuss the proposed topic                            | • Nursing faculty
• Nursing administration
• Both needed to make the librarian part of the thesis/dissertation process               |
| Do not know the value/significance of research and its connection with professionalization and the job market | Network or clearinghouse of experts to verify feasibility of research topic, suggest resources, and sign off on projects | • Subject librarians outside own university, especially those with focused expertise
• Faculty, especially outside own university                                                  |
