Program Notes

Ciaconna in G minor

TOMASO ANTONIO VITALI

Born March 7, 1663, Bologna, Italy

Died May 9, 1745, Modena, Italy

The chaconne is a musical form comprising a set of variations over a repeating ground bass of typically eight chords. Originating in Mexico, the form made its way to Spain where it often accompanied dancing, creating even phrases of dance form that became associated with peasant culture. In Italy, however, the chaconne found its niche more in high-art than the folk. Compositions would blend variations with overlapping phrases that deviated from the expected evenly arched form. Consequently, some of the only notated chaconnes from this period come from Italy.

Tomaso Antonio Vitali of Bologna was certainly familiar with the origins of the chaconne, for his father Giovanni Battista had trained him as a violinist and chamber musician. Despite Vitali's roots in Italy, a region possibly more significant to the violin than any other, it is doubtful that he is the composer of Ciaconna in G minor. The work's widespread performance since Jascha Heifetz often turns to a 1931 arrangement by Leopold Charlier, based on an earlier version by Ferdinand David and revised by Leopold Auer. While David's publication was completed within closer proximity to Vitali's lifetime, Charlier's arrangement, published some 200 years after the original composition, incorporates a larger scope of modern violin technique.

The work begins with the piano establishing a dark G minor sonority. As the chaconne theme descends, one may be reminded of Dido's Lament from Henry Purcell's opera Dido and Aeneas, where Purcell uses the descending motion of the bass to highlight the subject of death in the text - a technique known as text painting. As the variations continue, intensity is built through rhythmic complexity in both instruments and a powerful crescendo over the course of the ten minute composition.

Sonata for Piano and Violin in D major, Op. 12, No. 1

LUDWIG VAN BEETHOVEN

Born December 17, 1770, Bonn, Germany

Died March 26, 1827, Vienna, Austria

Sonata No. 1 in D major for Violin and Piano comes from Beethoven's first compositional period, marked with the classical elegance he gained largely from his teacher and mentor, Franz Joseph Haydn. Pressed with commissions throughout Europe, Haydn had little time to commit to working with the younger Beethoven simply because of his travel schedule. As Beethoven spent his days in Vienna honing his craft, Antonio Salieri served as an important guide to the composer, leading Beethoven to dedicate this work to him.

The opening movement is introduced by an arpeggiated unison statement from both instruments, firmly establishing a D major tonic. Violin and piano create flowing harmonic motion while arches of melodic material alternate. After a brief introduction in the piano, the theme of the second movement begins in the violin. Throughout the variations, Beethoven transforms the ethereal qualities of the A major key center by moving to the parallel minor and frequently alternating the theme between the two instruments. Before returning to the opening material, a rousing climax in the minor mode suggests the goal of an overlying ternary form.

The work concludes with a light rondo in 6/8, a musical form characterized by a recurring “rondo” theme interspersed with contrasting episodes. Rhythmic direction is created with displaced accents and syncopations. A quasi-recitative section (stated in unison as in the first movement) replaces the cadenza that one may find in a concerto, followed by a confident resolution in the tonic.

Sonata No. 3 in C minor, Op. 45

EDVARD GRIEG

Born June 15, 1843, Bergen, Norway

Died September 4, 1907, Bergen, Norway

Just as Beethoven had traveled to Vienna to study composition, Edvard Grieg ventured from his hometown of Bergen, Norway to study in Leipzig, Germany. Immensely talented, he was only 15 years old upon entering the Leipzig Conservatory. Nonetheless, he quickly became restless in school, calling instruction from his piano teachers, including Muzio Clementi, too “sterile.” Even with frustrations over his education, the city offered the young pianist and composer ample opportunity to observe performances from Clara Schumann, Richard Wagner, and Richard Strauss.

Following a return to Bergen, Grieg embarked on a European tour as a concert pianist. Often programming early Romantic music, most likely inspired by Clara Schumann’s concerts, Grieg drew little inspiration from folk music at this point in his career. But perhaps it was his return to his native city of Bergen that rejuvenated a passion for his own Norwegian culture. It was in this period that he would produce six chamber and solo works, including his Sonata No. 3 for Violin and Piano. The work was premiered in 1887 with Grieg at the piano and Adolf Brodsky on violin, who also premiered the Tchaikovsky violin concerto.

The Sonata melds traditional Romantic gestures with folk themes. Nonetheless, the first movement Allegro seemingly does not adhere to a typical formal structure. Melodic lines are passed from violin to piano in a graceful manner, while the opening theme appears in multiple forms throughout the movement, perhaps suggesting an overarching form. The second movement combines a lyrical theme, introduced by the piano, with a Renaissance dance at the center of the movement. A thrilling sonatina forms the final movement, concluding the work in a true Romantic manner.
