Program Notes

I

Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart dated these four songs from 1781 to 1787. The poems deal with sacrificial love, unrequited love, loves betrayed, love awakening, and a meditation on death. These wonderful songs are among Mozart's most loved works. Goethe who is still recognized today as one of the greatest German poets, was little known when he wrote the poem for "Das Veilchen". The poets for the other songs are lesser known. Baumberg was an early acquaintance of Mozart's and the poem for "Der Zauberer" came from a book of comic songs by Weisse of which Mozart owned a copy. "Abendempfindung", from an unknown poet, is an understated, tranquil, and elegant musical setting in which Mozart demonstrates his brilliance for melodic treatment of the text. This song is a true masterpiece.

II

Schubert is inarguably the greatest composer of German language songs who showed such genius by age 19 that his friends and colleagues offered financial support so that he could compose full time. The poet for "Auflösung" is Johann Mayrhofer, one of Schubert's closest friends. Mayrhofer was a law student and a talented albeit gloomy poet whose bouts of depression eventually led to his suicide in 1836. "Die Forelle" by C. F. D. Schubart is a charming poem about a darting trout that is finally caught by a crafty angler. Schubert uses this "Trout" theme later in the fourth movement of his A major Piano Quintet. The poem "Ständchen" written by Ludwig Rellstab, a Berlin critic, is said to be Schubert's most widely known song. In 1815, Schubert set Goethe's poem "Rastlose Liebe" for which he garnered much praise. Goethe's vivid poetry about urgent young love inspired Schubert to produce a song that was unlike any he had composed previously.

III

Gabriel Fauré dominated the world of the French mélodie and enjoyed nearly sixty years of song writing. He developed an advanced and identifiable style using boldness of harmony and expressive dissonances. "Notre amour", poem by Silvestre, was dedicated to Madame Castillon, a talented amateur performer in the Parisian salon circle. Paul Verlaine, poet of "Mandoline" and "Clair de lune" was a contemporary of Fauré and influenced his lyricism and melodic fluidity. The poetry for "Clair de lune" is from Verlaine's Fetes galantes in which the world of commedia dell'arte and the spirit of the "romantic festivities" are depicted in paintings by eighteenth-century artist, Watteau. Fauré sets Charles Grandmougin's poem "Adieu" as a sensual unfolding vocal line symbolizing the passage of life as quickly as a rose blossoms and fades. "Fleur jetée" another poem by Silvestre stands out for its heavy dramatic texture and use of unrestrained climactic phrasing.

Music: Giacomo Puccini

Libretto: Giuseppe Giacosa and Luigi Illica

Setting: Paris, c.1830

Donde lieta from Act III of Puccini's La Bohème is a touching aria in which Mimi decides to say farewell to Rodolfo forever rather than attempt reconciliation. Though Rodolfo accused Mimi of flirting with other men, the real reason he left her is that she is very sick and he does not want her to have to live in the cold garret apartment. Mimi has overheard this conversation and sings a tender farewell.

William Elden Bolcom is an American composer and pianist and was the composer-in-residence at the New York University School of the Arts as well as the visiting critic at the Yale University Drama School. His works are rooted in popular idioms and show a concern with religious and philosophical themes. His song cycle for soprano, viola, and piano, "Let Evening Come" was written in 1993 and uses the magnificent poetry of Maya Angelou, Emily Dickinson, and Jane Kenyon. These three poems describe with ever greater acceptance the phenomenon of death. Ailey, Baldwin, Floyd, Killens, and Mayfield were all great African American men who were outstanding artists, writers, and civil rights advocates.
