Thomas Jefferson’s Lives: Biographers and the Battle for History

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.kennesaw.edu/seln

Part of the Library and Information Science Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://digitalcommons.kennesaw.edu/seln/vol67/iss4/12

This Book Review is brought to you for free and open access by DigitalCommons@Kennesaw State University. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Southeastern Librarian by an authorized editor of DigitalCommons@Kennesaw State University. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@kennesaw.edu.
Opening this book, I asked myself, “What will I learn about Charlotte Perkins Gilman (1860-1935)?”

In my personal life, education and career journey, I heard or read about Charlotte Perkins Gilman’s advocacy for women. Learning about her life, I was encouraged to ask many questions of myself.

“What is a woman’s place? What is a woman’s right to voice personal opinions? What right does a woman have to choose a non-traditional career? Must a woman marry, bear children and be a house/home keeper for her life’s work?”

Little did I know of Gilman’s long and dedicated life of challenging women to seek meaning for their lives beyond traditional marriage, children, and house-keeping. I was to learn from the selections in Bergman’s book, Gilman raised awareness of differing perceptions of women’s roles in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, by her writings, speaking and travels in the United States and abroad.

Jill Bergmann presents a collection of essays that explain Gilman’s work and her struggles toward a life of meaning for herself, “A Woman’s Place is Not in the Home” (p.1), “Geography and Biography: Places in and of Gilman’s Life” (p. 13), “Know Your Place: Limits on Women’s Freedom and Power” (p.97) and “Reclaiming and Defining A Women’s Place” (p. 131).

The text is enhanced with photographs, paintings, street scenes, busts of Gilman, and places of Gilman’s travels. Though Charlotte Perkins Gilman committed suicide in 1935, her work can live on in the pages of Bergman’s book. I was to learn from the selections in Bergman’s book, Gilman raised awareness of differing perceptions of women’s roles in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, by her writings, speaking and travels in the United States and abroad.

An interesting article may be found online: “The utopian ‘feminist apartment hotels’ of Charlotte Perkins Gilman. Her idea was regarded as ‘the most dangerous enemy American domesticity has yet had to encounter.”

https://www.curbed.com/2019/7/24/20697836/charlotte-perkins-gilman-feminist-theorist-utopian-architecture

Carol Walker Jordan, Ph.D. MLIS

As with other authors of our times, it is optional to attend a major academic conference and come away with the presentations in hand to form a book such as Thomas Jefferson’s Lives: Biographers and the Battle for History. In this selection for review, Robert M.S. McDonald says he attended a conference, “Jefferson’s Lives”. This conference “featured papers on major nineteenth-and twentieth-century biographers of Jefferson, by major twentieth-and twenty-first-century scholars of Jefferson” (p. Foreward 1).

In the Section, “Contributors”, we can see the names and credentials of 12+ presenters. Of great interest to me is the Contribution by Annette Gordon-Reed’s “Section 12 That Woman Fawn Brodie and Thomas Jefferson’s Intimate History”. Gordon-Reed is “Charles Warren Professor of American Legal History at Harvard Law School and Professor of History in Harvard’s Faculty of Arts and Sciences. Gordon-Reed gained distinction by having won the 2009 Pulitzer Prize in History and the 2008 National Book Award for Non-Fiction, plus 12 other awards including “The Hemingses of Monticello: An American Family (2008)”. Noted also is that in the Index, credits are shown that link the writings of the contributors to the topic “Hemings, Sally and the TJ relationships”.

While many topics surrounding the life and times of Jefferson grab our attention and warrant inclusion in biographical writings, the “Hemingses” and Thomas Jefferson present a fascination to which we are drawn and from which we emerge to hold personal opinions. This may be a crucial insight into the writing of biography.

It is said in the leaf of the cover: “The contributors to this book explore how individual biographers have shaped history—as well as how the interests and preoccupations of the times in which they wrote helped to shape their portrayals of Jefferson.” After reading Gordon-Reed’s contribution, we may ask ourselves if this is true of her writing?

Carol Walker Jordan, Ph.D., MLIS

As I read the cover of the book, I was fascinated by the story of how on February 27, 1947, 24 year old Willie Earle an African American man was arrested for the murder of a Greenville, SC, taxi driver named T. W. Brown. The story goes that Earle was abducted from his jail cell by a mob, and then beaten, stabbed and shot to death. The author says “this lynching of Willie Earle led to the most outrageous trial of 31 suspects, most of them cabbies, and twenty-one confessions—a nine day trial in May that attracted national press attention that ended in acquittal by an all-white jury” (cover leaf).

They Stole Him Out of Jail Historical Marker
https://www.hmdb.org/m.asp?m=40503

William B. Gravely provides a comprehensive account of all the happenings in this major trial that included

1) the arrest of Willie,
2) the background of the trial proceedings,
3) the trial,
4) the complex political and legal issues that emerged over the trial,
5) its impact on white and black relations in South Carolina and the nation.

Gravely also provides in depth information on the topic of “lynching” (see Index, p. 302).

Lynching in the United States

Lynching is the practice of murder by a group of people by extrajudicial action. Lynching in the United States rose in number after the American Civil War in the late 19th century, following the emancipation of slaves; they declined in the 1930s. Most lynchings were of African-American men in the Southern United States.

Recommended for public and academic libraries. A comprehensive research document that brings into the criminal justice system a model for others to follow. Illustrations random pages 2-207. List of defendants pg. 231, Notes page 235, Bibliography p. 182, Index 293.

Carol Walker Jordan, PhD. MLIS

George Gideon’s “letters had been in the possession of Gideon’s great grandniece. Discovered after her death, the collection of 51 letters resided in her attic wrapped in manila paper like a badly wrapped paper”.

20 The Southeastern Librarian