FICTION

Healing Stones: A Sullivan Crisp

Novel by Nancy Rue and Stephen Arterburn (Thomas Nelson, 2008; ISBN 978-0-8499-1890-2, $14.99).

This was my first foray into the world of Christian fiction, and I had no idea what to expect. I admit that I anticipated some preaching, at least a little bit, but I was happy to discover that this was not the case. Healing

Stones is the story the Costanas family as they deal with the aftermath of infidelity. Demitria Costanas, a theology professor, is married to Rich, a New York firefighter who was caught up in the hell of 9/11, and they have two teenage children. To try to help Rich heal from the emotional trauma of the World Trade Center disaster, Demitria moves the family to Washington state and takes a job as a theology professor at a Christian college. She begins an affair with a colleague, and when a hidden photographer snaps photos of them together, her world falls apart. Fired by her college and rejected by her family, she becomes a modern-day Hester Prynne, wearing the badge of adultery. At the request of a friend, she agrees to meet with Sullivan Crisp, an unorthodox psychologist who comes with his own set of emotional baggage. They work together as Sully helps Demitria sort through all the issues in her life, leading her to an understanding of why she behaved as she did and a realization that God loves her and wants her to have a fulfilling life. Healing Stones is a story of redemption with a bit of mystery thrown in. It grabs you from page one and doesn't let up, with two subplots woven in throughout the story. The characters are real and believable, and the situations don't feel contrived. The authors deal with difficult issues of sin, forgiveness and healing, and all without coming off as preachy. This is the first novel in the Sullivan Crisp series, and I look forward to future installments. Recommended for public libraries. ▶▶

JUVENILE

Dad, Jackie, and Me by

Myron Uhlberg; illustrated by Colin Bootman (Peachtree Publishers, 2005; ISBN 1-56145-329-3, $16.95).

Baseball figures prominently in this multilayered book set in 1947 in New York City, the year Jackie Robinson, the grandson of a slave and the first black man to play in Major League Baseball, begins his Brooklyn Dodger career. However, this story is just as much the sentimental and insightful story of a boy and his relationship with his deaf father, with whom he learns about discrimination and tolerance within the framework of a shared love of baseball. While the story is fictional, much of it is based in truth, as the author's father was deaf, and the story is steeped in authentic details and true understanding of deafness and the discrimination faced by the deaf in the earlier 20th century. The layers of the story mesh beautifully as a strong link is established between the story of racial discrimination faced by Robinson and the discrimination and embarrassment felt at times by both father and son when engaged in social situations. The story begins with Opening Day for the Dodgers in 1947, Robinson's debut. A young boy who loves baseball dreams of attending a game at Ebbets Field to see Jackie Robinson play. His father arrives home one day with tickets for a game. While the boy is enthralled with the crowds, vendors, music and field, he also feels ashamed when his father, while cheering, cannot pronounce Jackie's name correctly. He also feels the same when, practicing catch on the street in their neighborhood, his father cannot easily catch the ball. Father and son avidly follow Jackie Robinson in person, on the radio and in the daily newspaper; attend several games; and keep a scrapbook of Jackie's career, while the boy's father, in sign, explains to the boy the harsh realities of discrimination. In the last game of the playoffs, with them in attendance, Jackie catches a line drive for the last out of the game and throws the ball into the crowd, straight to the young boy's father! His father easily catches the ball for the first time ever, "and just like that, the baseball season of 1947 was over." But while the season was over, the memories linger, as do the lessons. Highly recommended for grades two-five. ▶▶

Cynthia's Attic: The Magic Medallion by Mary Cunningham
(Echelon Press Publishing, 2006; ISBN 978-1-59080-460-5, $9.99).

Good children's stories are usually enjoyable and thought-provoking for adults as well as children. This time-travel adventure by Villa Rica, Ga., author Mary Cunningham includes plenty of excitement for young readers: a sinister clown, a helpful Gypsy family who can work magic, a treasure hidden in a cave, a forest fire and an apparently threatening horseman in pursuit of our heroines, best friends Cynthia and Augusta ("Gus"). But it also sounds some themes that will intrigue adults. One of these is the ties that bind us to our ancestors, which include not just our genes, but, often, the objects that have passed from their lives into ours and the places that have been significant to a family over generations as well. Cynthia and Gus time-travel to their grandmothers' childhood from the attic of Cynthia's family home by putting on their ancestors' clothes. Another theme is the desire to know what our parents and grandparents were like before we were born when they were young. Yet a third is dreams, with their combination of eerie familiarity and strangeness — a topic that has fascinated human beings throughout history. Mary Cunningham got the idea for the Cynthia's Attic books when she had recurring dreams about the attic of her childhood best friend. When she began writing this series, the dreams stopped. Cynthia's Attic: The Magic Medallion is the second book in the series. This 50-something reader is sufficiently intrigued to go back and look up the first book, Cynthia's Attic: The Missing Locket, and to eagerly await the appearance of the third, Cynthia's Attic: Curse of the Bayou. ▶▶

Keturah and Lord Death by Martine Leavitt
(Boyd's Mill Press, 2006; ISBN 978-1-9324-2529-1, $16.95).
Georgia Peach Book Award for Teen Readers Nominee

Sixteen-year-old Keturah follows a hart into the woods of medieval England, becomes lost, and after three days, Lord Death arrives to whisk her away. Putting her storytelling skills to use, Keturah bargains with Lord Death, promising to finish her story of a young woman seeking true love if he will grant her one more day of life. In addition, Lord Death responds that if Keturah can find true love in the one day she is granted, he will not take her at all. Besides agreeing to her terms and granting the extra boon, much to Keturah's surprise and dismay, Lord Death states that he plans to make her his bride and shares the startling news that plague will visit the town. The next day, Keturah visits the village wise woman to get a charm enabling her to identify her true love and attempts to find a way to save her neighbors from the coming plague. Keturah's search is to no avail, but she manages to gain another day from Lord Death by weaving a different story and again withholding the ending. Throughout the course of the novel, the villagers alternately fear and revere Keturah and her unusual relationship with Lord Death. Leavitt's lyrical style is effective for the telling of this story that closely resembles a fairy tale, containing elements of both light and dark. Though Keturah's dilemmas combined with her sensibilities will appeal to teens, the themes explored in the book broaden its appeal to adult readers as well. Leavitt sustains the suspense of Keturah's fate all
